MATERIALS ON WAY FOR NEW HOTEL TO BE ERECTED ON NEW YORK AVE.

W. G. King has received a letter from G. C. Hunter, enclosing bill of lading for the first shipment of materials to be used in the construction of the new hotel and business block on New York avenue, with instructions for storing the material where it will be ready for use later in the month.

Other carloads of material will follow closely this shipment and as soon as Mr. Hunter arrives from Ohio, with the final approval of the plans by the Florida Hotel Commissioner, work will be started at once. A drawing of the front view of the new hotel will be on exhibition at the office of W. G. King in the next few days.

The hotel will have several store rooms on the first floor, and is the first unit of the whole block that will be constructed by Mr. Hunter during the winter. The old Bon Air hotel building has been sold to F. B. Keney and will be moved to another location at once. The small office of Parker Realty Co., will be used by Mr. Hunter for his offi- while the building operation are under way.

It is understood that the old Rockham building, known to many as "The New York Stores", will be torn down to be moved out of the way of the contractors who will be on the job in a few weeks. At present this bunch of frame buildings is occupied as rooming house on the upper floor and C. C. Pike studios, W. G. King, real estate and M. C. Bracey, Woman's Exchange on the lower floor.

As soon as operations have been started on this block it is understood that the Bank of St. Cloud will complete their plans for a new building on the corner of Tenth street, the new banking house to face on Tenth street instead of New York Avenue, the ten feet being given to complete the widening of New York avenue between Tenth and Eleventh street.

STALNAKER HUDSON-ESSEX CO. ANNOUNCE OPENING OF FINE NEW SERVICE STATION

The formal opening of the Hudson-Essex Motor Company, at the intersection of Clyde and Penfield avenues, on the Dixie Highway in South Kissimmee, will take place Saturday morning at 9 o'clock ,when patrons and friends of this new establishment are invited to investigate what is declared to be among the most artistic and up-to-date service station south of Jacksonville. While appealing to the aesthetic sense of beauty, it readily meets the exacting demands of the trading public, and already the management of this new enterprise has adopted "Service With Dispatch" as its slogan. The building is of the Spanish type of architecture and was erected at a cost $10,00. The color scheme calls for a background of orange, flushed with blue, and the intermingling and blending of the two colors presents the appearance of the blue waveiets of the sea dancing in the golden beams and afterglow of a setting sun.

Four spacious drive-ways lead to the four ten-gallon, visible, Gulf gas dispensers. The display room is semi-circular, and Manager Stalnaker plans to have on display, at all times, the latest modeled Hudson and Essex cars. Adjoining the display room is the office. A ladies rest rom will be maintained, and for the convenience of patrons, tobacco and soft drinks will be sold.

C. J. Traynham, recently from Brox, ton, Ga., will be in personal charge of the office and filling station, while Sam Prather, well known in Kissimmee ,will assist in the sales department. T. M. Denby, an expert Hudson-Essex repairman ,and for last eight years connected with the Hudson distributing agency of Jackson, Miss. ,will arrive in a few days to take charge of the mechanical department.

"An emergency call department will be had, and tire work will be a specialty", said J. W. Stalnaker, manager. "We will have a night shift and a day shift, and will close Saturday nights at 11:30 and open again Monday morning at 1:00 a. m. We ask the co-operation of our patrons and friends in observing these hours."

Mr. Stalnaker needs no introduction to Kissimmee people. Having been among us for three years, he has made for himself many friends. For nearly two years he was connected with the Kissimmee Auto Company in the sales department.

"My problem," said Mr. Stalnaker, "is not being able to get cars fast enough, I will be in better position to serve the public with promptness and satisfaction.

FARMERS & GROWERS MEET AT GAINESVILLE NEXT MONDAY

Farmers and Fruit growers week to be held in Gainesville will start next Monday August 10 and continue through that week. The program will be concluded at noon on Saturday so as to give those in attendance a chance to get away before Sunday. Reservations should be made at the earliest possible moment now either direct to the Agricultural College at Gainesville or with County agent J. R. Gunn, who has at his office applications for reservation.

The University dormitories are to be used by those who care to stay on the campus at quite a saving in their board bill. Room and meals on the campus will cost only $1.25 per day. Those who expect to room in the dormitories should take their bedding, such as pillow case, sheets and blankets along as these are not furnished by the University.

A program has been arranged by the committee in charge that assures every one who is fortunate enough to be able to attend a week of real enjoyment both from a pleasure and profitable standpoint.

Don't worry about what you will do with the family while you are gone. Just put them in the old buggy and carry them along as there is to be a program that will interest them also, prepared especially for — by — Home demonstration department of the University of Florida.

The authorities at the Agricultural college say they are expecting at least 1500 farmers to be at this week get-together. This will give the farmers over the state the best opportunity they have ever to get acquainted with the other fellow and get ideas from farmers over the entire farming area of Florida.

The big entertainment feature of the week is to be a picnic at a large spring several miles from Gainesville, and although they have not told us what the Eats will be or what will happen while the picnic is going on, no one need be worried about not getting enough to eat or not enjoying the outing as the man who has charge of this part of the program has been in charge o fthis feature of the programs put on by the College for some time and he has never failed to put over one in good shape yet.

Make arrangements to be in Gainesville Monday August 10 and let the Agricultural College authorities do the rest of the looking out for you that week. It will be worth your time and the money you will have to spend on the trip.

RANKIN-SHINE SELL LINCOLN

Mrs. Louise Bates Rosenthal of the St. Cloud Real Estate & Investment Co., purchased a Lincoln Sedan this week from the Rankin-Shine Motor Co., of this city. This is the first Lincoln which has been sold by an Osceola County Dealer and we feel proud to know the sale was made in St. Cloud.

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES

Rev. B. Atchison, Pastor

This is vacation month for the pastor and family and we are planning to make a number of short trips although we may not get very far from home at any time. The pulpit will be supplied by somebody every week, next Sunday morning.

Rev. J. B. Webb, pastor of the Baptist church at Pine Castele will preach for us and bring him, the Whosoever-Will Bible Class will be taught by Mr. Steinwinder during the pastor's absence, the International S. S. course of lessons will be used during this month. The B. Y. P. U. will have charge of the service the following Sunday (August 16,) and from all reports will put on a fine program. The B. Y. P. U. will also have charge of one of the Prayer-meetings, the other two will be led by Mr. Hollenbaugh and Mr. Thos. Summers.

At the last business meeting of the church it was decided to build the walls up to the top and put on the permanent roof rather than stoping with the basement alone according to the original plan. The motion was unanimous as everybody seemed to think that this would be much cheaper in the long run and also give us the opportunity of finishing the inside just as fast as we are able. Over $2000. has already been handed in to the treasury for the building fund.

Anumber of $100. gifts have already been received but of course a great many more will be needed before the work is completed. Mr. W. G. Wood is Treasurer of this fund or it may be sent direct to the pastor who will see that he gets it. From all reports we are going to have a record breaking crowd in Florida this winter and the Churches must do their part in taking care of them. The new lights (The white way) on Mass. Ave., are a great help to the church, many compliments and words of praise have been received by the Choir as the result of the music rendered last Sunday evening at the Union service. We will all be glad when our new building is complete as we need the room in so many ways.

President Not Resting On Vacation

An unusual picture of the President and Mrs. Coolidge aboard the Mayflower for a short cruise along the New England Coast. Despite the fact that the President is badly in need of rest and relaxation, reports from Swampscott, Mass., are that he has again thrown himself into affairs of state with important conferences scheduled almost every day.

C. A. MISSIMER ASSUMED DUTIES OF CITY MANAGER OF ST. CLOUD TUESDAY

C. A. Missimer who has been acting as official city engineer for the past several weeks, while the city commission was completing the details of the $500,000 bond issue with John B. Collins as City Manager, has this week taken over his offical duties of City Manager, and Mr. Collins assumes the title of city collector and inspector.

At a meeting of the City Commission this week it was decided that the bonds having been sold, delivered and the money being on hand the contemplated change in heads of the city departments could now proceed without hindrance to the work to be undertaken in letting the contracts and having the work done as provided in the bond issue recently voted.

Mr. Missimer came to St. Cloud from Seattle Wash., to accept the place of city manager, but when he arrived there was much detailed work on hand in connection with the city bond issue and it was decided to have John B. Collins continue as manager until all these details were complete, which has been done.

Mr. Missimer has issued the following announcement of appointment of heads of various deppartments of the city, and offers a few suggestions to the taxpayers, as follows:

The executive branch of City Government of the City of St. Cloud will, for the present, be under the following heads.

C. A. Missimer, City Manager; J. B. Collins ,City Collector, Accountant and Sanitary Inspector; Mike Peterson, Head Engineer; J. C. Gallatin, Assistant Engineer and Electric Supt.; J. L. Hopton, Third Assistant Engineer; Hardy Barber, Head Lineman in charge Maintenance; and John Hale, Street Superintendent.

Patrons will report light and water troubles to Collector City Hall, or J. C. Gallatin, Electric Supt., Power House, Street Obstruction or Ordinance violations should be reported to Chief of Police or City Manager City Hall.

Water and Light regulation must be strictly observed by patrons as they be enforced by the City management, if we ar eto have an efficient service; and law violations must be corrected if we are to have a clean city. Every citizen of St. Cloud must help.

C. A. MISSIMER,
City Manager.

C. A. BAILEY SELLS GROCERY BUSINESS TO ENTER REAL ESTATE EXCLUSIVELY

Clarence A. Bailey who a few weeks ago announced that he had entered the real estate business, has this week closed a deal whereby he retires from the grocery business which he has conducted very successfully since 1919, when returned from service in France with the American Expeditionary forces in the World War.

Mr. Bailey bought out the Firkin grocery then located in the building adjoining the Seminole hotel and later moved to the Farris building between Eleventh and Twelfth on New York Avenue, where he soon built up one of the largest retail grocery concerns in the city.

A few months ago, Mr. Bailey purchased the building occupied by the Ide grocery between Tenth and Eleventh Street, next door to Ferguson's store, and moved his business there and made extensive improvements in the property, enlarging his scope of business by adding a fresh meat market to the grocery business.

When a few months ago real estate began to move at a rapid rate, Mr. C. A. Bailey, owning considerable property decided to enter that field of activity. He anounced his entry into the real estate business in connection with grocery store advertisements, and now has decided to devote his whole time to real estate.

Jenkins, who has been connected with the Bailey grocery for several months, and Mr. Jenkins will conduct a groverteria in the building now occupied by the Bailey grocery and Mr. Bailey will provided an office for his real estate business in the front of the store building.

In retiring from the grocery business Mr. Bailey announces that he will collect all the accounts on his books and pay all the bills of the store up to the first of this month. He also expressed his appreciation to the many customers for their liberal patronge that has made his store one of the best in the city.

HELEN KELLER WANTS TO SEE FLOWERS GROWING IN FLORIDA

ARCADIA, July 18.—When asked what she thought of the music of the band which was then playing Helen Keller, deaf and blind from infancy replied to Rev. Paul Ernest she thought it was beautiful. Miss Keller beat time to the music with her hand was on a table and her body swayed in perfect rhythm with the music.

On his recent trip to the Lions Convention at Cedar Point, O., Revern. Ernest was able to obtain a half-hour interview with Miss Keller because of the fact that a former parishioner of teacher. In the Introduction Mis Keller placed one finger upon the nose, one upon the lips and one upon the larynx of Reverend Ernest and caugh the vibration of his words instantly and carried on a conversation as fluently as if she possessed all her senses.

Miss Keller has perfect poise. When she learned he was from Florida she asked at once if it is not hot here. She said she had been in Florida but had never "seen" the Florida flowers. She asked about the different kinds of flowers, trees and the tropical shrubs.

Evolution Trial Useless

She and Reverend Ernest thoroughly discussed the Evolution Trial. She said in her opinion the trial was useless and unimportant when one realizes the Oneness and perfection of God the teacher of Miss Keller explained how she had taught Miss Keller what she knows. The first word she ever learned was "God"! When she learned this word her teacher pointed up and after this all other words were taught through objects and all objects were explained as manifestation of God.

One of the first words taught Miss Keller was "hydrant" and this was closely followed by the word "water." Miss Keller declared she is happy and does not want people to pity her. She is very anxious for all blind persons to have the opportunity of learning to read braille. She declared all she help the blind is to be taught to help themselves when being their happiness.

She "Heard" Caruso

In speaking of music, she said she had "heard" Caruso sing and thought he was wonderful. She said tonal quality is conveyed to her by vibrations. She plays the piano some and shows by her discussion that she thoroughly knows and enjoys music.

In speaking Miss Keller enunciates very slowly and plainly and has a wonderful vocabulary. She uses long words with ease and in ordinary conversation. Her face is soft and expressive and she has what would be called an attractive personality. She is as active physically as intellectually. She uses the typewriter skillfully and spends much time dictating letters and has written several books.

To show the sensitiveness and power of this woman, when she addressed the Lions Convention they applauded her. Someone asked how many people that she thought were in the audience. She said between five and six thousand when the count was made it was found that there were 5,600 persons in the hall.

Reverend Ernest said when he saw the wonderful achievements this woman had made, when so heavily handicapped, he remembered words of the Bible, "Master, who sinned this man or his parents?" and the reply of the Master, "Neither this man nor his parents have sinned but that the work of God may be made manifest."

HIGH LIGHTS OF BRYAN'S UNDELIVERED ADDRESS IN EVOLUTION CONTROVERSY

Christ has made of death a narrow star-lit strip between the companionship of yesterday and the reunion of tomorrow; evolution strikes out the stars and deepens the gloom that enshrouds the tomb.

"It may be a surprise to your honor, and to you, gentlemen of the jury, as it was to me, to learn that Darwin spent three years at Cambridge studying for the ministry.

"He (Darwin) drags man down to the brute level and then pointing man by brute standards, he questions whether man's mind can be trusted with God and immortality."

"These evolutionists do not stop to think of the crime they commit when they take faith out of the hearts of men and women and lead them out into a starless night."

"What is the taking of a few dollars from one in day or night in comparison with the crime of leading one away from God and away from Christ?"

"The soul is immortal and religion deals with the soul; the logical effect of the evolutionary hypothesis is to undermine religion and thus effect the soul."

"The bodies of our people are so valuable that druggist and physicians must be careful to properly label all poisons; why not be as careful to protect the spiritual life of our people from the poisons that kill the soul?"

"Psychologists who built upon the evolutionary hypothesis teach that man is but a bundle of characteristics inherited from brute ancestors."

"No more repulsive doctrine was ever proclaimed by man; if all the biologists of the world teach this doctrine—as Mr. Darrow says they do—then may heaven defend the youth of our land from their impious babblings."

"Christians desire that their children be taught all the sciences but they do not want them to lose sight of the rock of ages while they study the age of the rocks; neither do they desire them to become absorbed in measuring the distance between the stars that will forget him who holds the stars in hand."

"The cry in the business world, in industrial world, in the professional world, in the political world—even in the religious world—is for consecrated talents—for ability plus a passion for service."

"Evolution, disputing the miracle, and ignoring the spiritual in life, has no place for the regeneration of the individual. It realizes no cry of repentance and scoffs at the doctrine that one can be born again."

"An evolutionist would never write such a story as the Prodigal Son; it contradicts the whole theory of evolution."

"A heart can be changed in the twinkling of an eye and a change in the life follows a change in the heart."

"'Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven'; evolution makes a mockery of the Lord's prayer."

"He (Darwin) wants us to believe that evolution develops a human sympathy that finally becomes so tender that it repudiates the law that created it and thus invites a return to a level where the extinguishing of pity and sympathy will permit the brutal instincts again to do their progressive (?) work."

"Can any Christian remain indifferent. Science needs religion to direct its energies and to inspire with lofty purposes those who employ the forces that are unloosed by science. Evolution is at war with religion because religion is supernatural; it is therefore the relentless foe of Christianity, which is a revealed religion."

"Science is a magnificient material force, but it is not a teacher of morals."

"Science has made war so hellish that civilization was about to commit suicide."

"It (the Scopes trial) is also a renewal of the scene in Pilate's court."

Again force and love meet face to face, and the question, "what shall I do with Jesus?" must be answered. A bloody, brutal doctrine—evolution—demands as the rabble did nineteen hundred years ago, that he be crucified."

"Christianity welcomes truth from whatever source it comes and is not afraid that any real truth from any source can interfere with the divine truth that comes by inspiration from God himself."

"Evolution is not truth; it is merely an hypothesis—it is millions of guesses strung together."

"Chemistry is an insurmountable obstacle in the path of evolution. It is one of the greatest in the sciences; it separates the atoms—isolates them and walks about them, so to speak. If there was in nature, a progressive force, an eternal urge, chemistry would find it. But it is not there. All of the ninety-two original elements are separate and distinct; they combine in fixed and permanent proportions."

MANY BOY SCOUTS ENTER FIRST ANNUAL 'CAMPMENT, PLYMOUTH

BOY SCOUT CAMP, PLYMOUTH, Fla., Aug. 1—Before 10 o'clock this morning, 53 boys had registered for the first annual encampment of the Central Florida Council, which is comprised of Brevard, Volusia, Seminole, Lake, Osceola and Orange counties. Director J. C. Morris said by nightfall the full quota of 100 scouts would arrive.

Director Morris said that there would be enough tent room for all and that cots and all necessary equipment for the comfort of the boys would be installed before sundown.

The kitchel and headquarters building is complete with Henry Thomas, negro, former Ohio river boat cook, who comes highly recommended, in charge of the commissary.

Four boats and a canoe for water sports and safety have been donated and a life ring with liaches been given by the National Red Cross at Washington, D. C.

The training system will be built on the troop order. The boys will elect their scoutmaster and assistant and patrol leaders. A sufficient number of adult leaders will be on hand to take care of each troop, which will consist of not more than 16 boys.

The scouts have already demonstrated for merit badges "Be kind to animals." This morning a five specimen of the harmless black king snake was captured and is being tamed and will be the first of the collection of wild life for the zoological house which will be kept for that purpose.

The radio equipment is being installed and the scouts expect much amusement in the evening from this source. The boys are working hard cleaning up the grounds and making things shipshape and are in a happy mood.

The personnel: C. Morris, director; G. H. Knight, assistant director; Owen Rice, adjutant; Leo Calhoun, commissary and canteen director; Al Boland, senior Red Cross life saver in charge of the water sports; Don Cheney, in charge of singing.

TRIBUTE TO CAREER AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF THE COMMONER

"The sudden death of Mr. Bryan brought a sense of personal loss to Mrs. Coolidge and myself. It was only the other day that he had been our guest at the White House. We wish to extend to you and your family our most heartfelt sympathy.

"Mr. Bryan has been a prominent figure in public affairs for a third of a century. He has been a leader in the advocacy of many moral reforms and was representative of the effort for purity in our political life. He was endowed with the great gift of eloquence. The sincerity of his motives was beyond dispute. He was three times chosen head of a great political party and held the exalted office of secretary of state. His career was another example of what American opportunity affords to those who have the will industriously to apply themselves. It would be difficult to find among his contemporaries any one with so large a circle of friends and acquaintances who had so generously bestowed upon him their esteem and confidence.

"I trust that you may be given great consolation in remembering all his worth and in the abiding faith that a divine providence had ordered all things well.' —President Coolidge.

"I have been a friend of Mr. Bryan for thirty-eight years since we started as young lawyers in Lincoln, Nebr. Throughout all these years of work and strenuous public service there emphasized a high personal character.

"In all he did, Mr. Bryan was in earnest and in it all he tried to do good.

"Those who knew him best respected most his motives and his sincerity. He never did unworthy or mean things. He may have been mistaken at times as all are, but he was trying always to do the right as he saw it.

"Of his great influence on the public life though of his day, his public services and his transcendent ability as an orator I will leave to others to speak but I want simply as an old friend and neighbor for many years to pay my tribute of respect to a good and a great man, whose life has been one of high purpose and helpfulness and whose death brings a sense of personal loss."—Vice-President Dawes.

"By direction of the president, the undersigned is charged with the sad duty of announcing the death on July 26, 1925, at Dayton, Tenn., of William Jennings Bryan, a distinguished citizen of the United States, formerly a representative in congress from the state of Nebraska, a colonel in the Spanish-American war and secretary of state.

"All these capacities his service were characterized by a faithfulness to duty and a devotion to public interest. His private life was one for the emulation of all American citizens. Thrice the nominee of a great political party, his death will be especially mourned by a large personal following who hold him in affectionate esteem.

Display National Flag.

"As a testimony of this respect, it is ordered by the president that the national flag be displayed at half mast on the national buildings at Washington on the date of the funeral."

(Signed) "Frank B. Kellogg."

"Colonel Bryan was a great American and a Christian gentleman and his death is a distinct loss to America. His was a domestic personality and he has left his impress upon political, religious and civic life of the United States. While many differed with him politically and otherwise, he possessed the courage of his convictions and even his political enemies were forced to admire the rare courage and the indomitable fighting qualities he displayed in all his battles for what he believed was right. The future historian will accord Bryan a high place in the annals of the political history of the United States."—Governor Martin.

Governor Martin wired Mrs. Bryan: "I am shocked and grieved beyond expression to learn of the death of your illustrious husband. Personally as well as on behalf of the people of Florida may I not extend to you and other members of the bereaved family my heartfelt sympathy. Colonel Bryan was a great American, a Christian gentleman and the world can ill afford to lose such a man. His passing is a distinct loss to his country in whose service he laid down his life as truly as any soldier who ever died upon the field of battle."

Speaking tonight his opinion of the late Col. William Jennings Bryan, whose sudden death has beglomed the national capital where he was for years a familiar figure and a potent influence both in and out of congress, he was one of the great and towering publicists and orators of the nation. Colonel Bryan was a leader of strength in the fields of politics religion and moral reform and the country will mour the loss of a militant force for tremendous good in the varied walks in which he had earned merited fame and splendid name.

"I was glad that he saw a way to make Florida his home state," continued Senator Fletcher. "He was a citizen of the highest character and influence for good and had won the admiration and respect of the people of his adopted state. I was especially desirous that he could have written his memoirs, as I understand he had in mind when he removed to Florida, for the story of his life, with its rich and varied experiences, would have been a fine contribution of America. His wife is a remarkable and a splendid lady and I am sure the whole nation will sympathize deeply with her and the Bryan children in their irreparable loss."—U. S. Senator Fletcher.

"I am pained to hear of the death of Honorable William Jennings Bryan. I have known Mr. Bryan since 1896 and supported him twice for the presidency. He was a man of strong convictions and always espoused his cause with ability and courage. I since 1896 and supported him twice for the presidency. He was a man of strong convictions and always espoused his cause with ability and courage," Mr. Darrow continued. "I differed with him on many questions but always respected his sincerity and devotion. I am very sorry for his family and for his friends who loved him." —C. S. Darrow, Chief Counsel in the defense of Mr. Scopes.

"Mr. Bryan will rank as a great American, but history will mark against him, as others, some errors. He would have been President in 1900 except for his Madison Square Garden speech; he should not have left the Wilson cabinet, and he lost much in fame by opposing the Jeffersonian principle of keeping state and religion apart. As a preacher he would have excelled Henry Ward Beecher. The most beautiful thing in his character was his devotion to his invalid wife, and the whole country will give unaffected sympathy to her, who lost not only the lover of her school days, but of her mature years as well."—James M. Cox, former governor of Ohio and Democratic presidential candidate in 1920.

"I hear this with a great deal of regret. He was a vigorous American and even those who differed with his ideas had great regard for him."

Mr. Bryan, in supporting William Gibbs McAdoo was one of Mr. Smith's strongest opponents in the race for the last Democratic presidential nomination. —Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York.

"I am sure that Mr. Bryan went as he would have wished to go, fighting for the convictions that were nearest to his heart. In this sense his death is in keeping with his life. Not even those who most disagreed with him ever questioned his courage and the deep sincerity of his convictions, whether religious or political.

"So long as he lived, he spoke the sentiment of millions of his countrymen and influenced the thought of others to an extent that can hardly be measured. As one who counted himself a personal friend, I am deeply grieved by his passing and regard it as a great loss to the entire country."—John W. Davis, Democratic candidate for President last year.

"Mrs Taft and I extend to you our heartfelt sympathy in your great sorrow. Mr. Bryan and I were long time friends though usually opposed on the issues of the day. His will will be a most notable figure in our political history. He has had for many years among our people a remarkable personal following with whom he exercised great influence because they believed in him, his sincere patriotism and his political views and who will greatly miss his courageous and leadership. —W. H. Taft, Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court.

"The sudden death of William Jennings Bryan is a loss to this country. The millions that disagreed with his political theories respected his integrity and courage and will regret the loss of a brave, sincere man.

William Jennings Bryan held the confidence and affection of an enormous following from the day he entered public life until the ady of his death. He never compromised with what he believed to be the truth. He set before the nation an example of sincerity needed in our public life." —Arthur Brisbane.

"The friend of God, the enemy of the devil. To know William Jennings Bryan was an invitation to do right.

"Although he chose politics as a career he was essentially a crusader for Christianity. He was at his best when fighting on moral rather than religious issues. He fell with his face to the enemy.

"He was a Lutheran in his faith, a Napoleon in his battle for God, a Lincoln in his patience. Crown him as one of the world's immortals." —The Rev. William A. Sunday, Evangelist.

"It is with incomparable grief and sorrow that I learn of the sudden bereavement that has overtaken you at an hour when the eyes of the nation were riveted upon your loved one and I have to assure you of the heartfelt sympathy and prayers of myself and of my officers and soldiers throughout our ranks.

"Your beloved husband was a champion of great national and eternal issues and apostle of righteousness and a covenanter with God and the church for the inspiration and authenticity of the Bible, as well as the teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

"In death as in life the great citizen and commoner was found on the great battlefield of the world, dying a martyr in the combat for truth against negativism. You have lost a loving and devoted partner; the country a fearless statesman; the Christian world a heroic defender of the faith, and the Salvation Army a true and loving friend.

"In this valley of sorrow the Great Comforter will give you solace and support till in the morning golden you meet in union perpetual." —Evangeline Booth, commander of the Salvation Army.

A PLEASANT OUTING

On Saturday of last week, a party of St. Cloud people, including Mrs. Evangeline Walther, Mrs. Feaney, Mrs. Rankin and Mrs. Annabell were guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Davis and their little daughter, Helen, of Atlanta, Ga., on an automobile trip to Carnell a subdivision lying ten mills beyond Sanford. The morning was delightfully cool and the scenery unsurpassed for beauty and coloring.

There were so many subdivisions with "Lots for Sale" you could hardly tell where one left off and another began.

Many changes were noted along the route, including new buildings, cleared up lands, all along the Dixie highway; a wonderful developement was going on. Kissimmee shows rapid growth as well as Taft and Pine Castle. When the party entered Orange Avenue at Orlando they wondered how they would ever get thru. The traffic was as heavy as it used to be when the mid-winter Fair was drawing the crowds.

Not finding parking space near any of the store it was decided to wait until the return trip to do a little shopping.

From Orlando on every filling station seemed to be the centre of a city in embryo. "Lots for Sale" greeted the eye at every turn.

It was still early in the morning when Sanford was entered but the bustle and hustle and new buildings under construction showed great progress, not an empty house was seen and not a sign for sale or rent on any building was discovered.

Passing thru the celery section we came to the higher ground and the first introduction to the future city of Carnell was seen the smoke of battl eberween nature and man who with fire was trying to subdue the stumps of large trees that had been cut to make room for the streets 130 feet wide which are being prepared for the paving in the business section of the city. This is truly a wonderful place and an ideal location for what Carnell Co. plans to make here "The Model City of Florida. There is a great diversity in the woodland as well as the soil. First on entering from the east are the beautiful Spanish oaks like tall soldiers guarding the roads leading to the beautiful lakes seen in the distance; beyond these an open park of the tall pines of Florida, thru which the large touring car can be driven in any direction as there is no undergrowth but a lovely carpet of grass like green velvet.

The lakes are not large but classic in outline, of considerable depth the sparkling pure water reflecting the surrounding scenery in a wonderful manner. The situation is very desirable here for a city being high and dry the slightly rolling toward the lakes which are separated by about equal distances, there are three of these lakes in the recently developed part of this subdivision. Leaving this enchanting place the party returned to Sanford for lunch and after seeing the great improvements around the city returned by Winter Park to be great impressed by the change which is daily taking place in the "City of Homes" and to realize that in every direction, no matter which you go Florida is in one great big boom and the people are coming from every direction and expecting to find a welcome awaiting them.

Carpenters are very scarce in St. Cloud at present. Rather we mean more are loafing, and it is hard to flat a man for odd jobs. New homes are being erected on every hand, and the type of buildings now under construction running into more money than usual, as many of them are concrete block stucco finish. The cement blocks are made in St. Cloud also.

LETTERS TO EDITORS

"The Evil sof Religious Legislation"

We have in our country a class of well meaning christian people who are zealously laboring to get the Congress of the United States committed to the principles of Religious Legislation. As stated by Article II of their Constitution, they desire to place "all christian laws, institutions, and usages of the government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land."

But Christian laws cannot be placed upon a legal basis in our National Constitution without first changing that clause which declares, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." It is therefore plainly manifest that our religious friends contemplate an amendment to the Constitution so that Congress can make laws repecting an establishment of religion, and thus prohibit the first exercise of a man's personal liberty in matters which pertain to religious worship.

This clas of religionist's desire that the Congress of the United States shall become the subservient instrument of the church, and do its bidding. They hold that religious institutions, particularly the Sunday Sabbath, should be protected by the State, and all the people should be required to observe it.

When all christian laws, institutions, and usages of the government shall have been placed upon an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land, then it is the purpose of our religious friends to see to it that no person shall hold an office of trust or profit, whose life is not in harmony with the christian laws of the country; or, in other words, none but christians can fill positions of trust or profit, whose life is not inharmony withe the christian laws of the country; or, in other words, none but christians can fill positions of trust in the nation.

When that time comes (if it ever does) there will be a wonderful revival among politicians and office seekers. Prompted by the spirit of gain and position, they will all suddenly become very religious for the purpose of securing positions of trust in our State and National halls of legislation. But what kind of christians will they be? They will be christians that "Love the uppermost seats in our legislative halls, and greetings in the market places." For a further description read Luke 11:42-44.

Since the laws of our country will then be made by these so-called christians; it is to be supposed that we will then have christian laws, and this nation will then be a christian nation. But who shall determine the question as to what constitutes christianity, or true religion? Prof. C. A. Blanchard, a prominent National Reformer says: "Constitutional laws punish for false money, weights and measures. So Congress must establish a standard of religon, or admit anything called religion."

Protestantism has heretofore claimed that the Bible, and the Bible alone is a sufficient rule of faith and practice; but Mr. Blanchard those who are associated with him would have all the citizens of our country accept a fa rule of faith which the Congress of the United States may agree upon. They will claim that heir religious laws are founded upon the Bible; but it will be the Bible as interpreted by the majorities in the popular churches.

They can all agree upon a few points of religious faith; such as that the soul is immortal, and can never die; the first day of the week commonly called Sunday is the Sabbath, and eternal torment as being the destiny of the wicked. Those who will not keep the Sunday Sabbath; or in other words those who will not obey the "Christian laws, institutions, and usages" of this christian nation, why, what will be done with them? Well, let us see.

When Congress shall make laws in harmony with the views of these so-called Christian Reformers, then we will have just what Mr. Blanchard and a host of others are asking for, viz., a National Religion. Then, if you and I go to the Bible for our religion, rather than to the Congress of the United States—if it is found that you and I do not believe in, nor conform to the National Religion,—we must repent of our mischeavious,—fall into line and worship,—not according to the dictates of our own conscience, as it has been enlightened by the Word of God,—but we must worship as the Bible has been interpreted by the majorities in the popular churches, and as dictated by the Congress of the United States.

If our conscience will not permit us to do this, then we must be dragged up before the courts, and there asked to give reasons for not obeying the laws of the country. If we can be persuaded to yield our convictions of duty to our God, and worship in harmony with the National Religion; then we must be punished as was Peter and John when they were put in the common prison after they had been commanded by the officers of the law not to speak at all, nor teach in the name of Jesus. Acts 5:17-29.

It is easy to see that if our friends succeed in securing that for which they are so earnestly seeking, we shall have in this country a church clothed with power to punish all those who will not worship according to the will of the majority. That means a subversion of civil government; the decline of true piety, faith and genuine religion, and the end of civil and religious freedom. Religious persecution will be revived, and in the face of oppression, men will again have to choose whether they will obey God or man. See Acts 5:17-29; Matt. 4:10.

As lovers of religious liberty let us all awake to our responsibility and privilege, and do all in our power to stay this tide of evil which threatens to take peace and prosperity from the earth. Let the watch word of everyone who loves liberty and his country be: "Freedom for all, oppression to none."

FLA. AUTO TAGS FOR 1926 TO BE YELLOW, BLACK

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Aug. 1.—Florida's auto license tags will have a black background with yellow figures they will retain the outline map of the state and will measure 6 to 16 instead of 7 to 17 inches, as at present.

A contract for such tags has been awarded to the Maryland State Penitentiary at Baltimore which calls for approximately 400,000 tags. They will be delivered at Tallahassee for 7 and 3-4 cent each as compared with 8 and 1-2 cents for 1925. The manufacturers will furnish an envelope for each tag.

The tags will be shipped to Tallahassee in carload lots and distributed from the capitol to the local agencies throughout the state from which they will be supplied to motor vehicle owners. At least one such agency will be established in each county, under provision of the motor vehicle act passed by the 1925 legislature. Two or three such agencies will probably be kept open in the larger cities for the convenience of applicants.

The Comptroller also has awarded a contract for 10,000 "for hire" concentainers at a cost of 8 cents each. They will be attractively constructed with mica fronts. 5,000 chauffeur badges also, have been contracted for at 6 and 3-4 cents each.

ST. CLOUD TO HAVE A FAST GRID OUTFIT

St. Cloud High school will be represented by a fast football team this fall according to a despatch to the Jacksonville Times-Union. Situated within eight miles of Kissimmee, this prosperous little town is making vigorous preparations with the intention of placing in the field as formidable and well-equipped outfit as anything in the state of Florida.

This year will mark the first time that St. Cloud has been able to propery back a gridiron aggregation, from all reports the material available is splendid. Already at this early date, Roland C. Baker, well known among the younger group of golfers, who is connected with local branch of A. G. Spalding & Bros., has outfitted a squad of eighteen men. Baker states that the town of St. Cloud is afire with enthusiasm and that those in charge of athletic activities spared no expense in furnishing the team the necessary regalia. "It will be as well equipped as any team in the state," is the way the young Spalding representative expressed it.

A. J. Geiger, athletic coach, who will guide the destinies of the eleven this fall, believes that he can turn out a team that will cope with the best in this section of the country, so good is the material. A pair of former Jacksonville boys will assist Geiger with the coaching. They are Fred Rankin and George Shine.

The news of a football team in St. Cloud will doubtless be received with interest among the local followers of football.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS' REPORT FOR THE MONTH OF JULY

The Board of County Commissioners in and for Osceola County, met at 10 A. M. on the above date, members present E. L. D. Overstreet, Chairman, H. P. Suhl, H. O. Partin, A. F. Bass and E. T. Minor. Messrs Johnston and Garrett as Attorneys for the Board and J. L. Overstreet, Clerk each being present.

The Board was called to order by its chairman, and the minutes of June 1st, 15th, and 22nd, were read and approved.

Rev. William Landiss, came before the Board ,and reported a new Abstract Company being organized in St. Cloud, and asked the board to allow them to place a desk with typewriter in the hallway for their convenience in doing their work. Mr. Garrett suggested that the matter be left to the clerk, to which the board gave their unanimous consent.

Commissioner H. P. Suhl, asked the board if possible to investigate the assessment for 1925, even though the books have been examined and closed, stating that Mr. C. H. Williams had asked to look into the assessment on his property. The board met as an equalization board and no complaint having been made at that time, no action was taken.

Commissioner H. P. Suhl reported that the state road crew had torn fence of Mrs. R. O. Livingston down, thereupon, the board instructed Mr. G. W. Ashton to repair the fence.

The following bonds were examined and approved:

Notary Bond of B. B. West, with John S .Cadel and D. C. McKay, as surety.

Notary Bond of W. G. King, with American Surety Company of N. Y., as surety.

Notary Bond of Fred F. Judd, with American Surety Co., of N. Y., as surety.

Notary Bond of C. W. Landiss, with American Surety Company of N. Y., as surety.

PAY HIGHER SALARIES AND RETAIN GOOD RURAL PARSONS

CHICAGO ILL., July 9.—Recommending better salaries in rural churches, asserting that the rural ministry should not be considered as a stepping stone to a city assignment or appointment ,and suggesting that the rural church must be well located and so constructed and equipped as to make possible a modern program, are some of the principles adopted by the Board of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church at its recent meeting in Minneapolis.

Joint commission from the Board of Bishops and the department of rural church of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, will work out the program. Bishop Ernest L. Waldorf of Kansas City, Missouri, is chairman and Professor M. A. Dauber, D. D., superintendent of the rural department ,assisted by a joint committee, will work out the recommendations of the Bishops.

The statement says that more than half of the Methodist churches are in communities of 2500 or less and furnish members to city churches. The so called "country mind" and "city mind" are recognitions of something very superficial. The city preacher of today was possibly a country preacher yesterday.

A rural commission should be organized on each Methodist Episcopal district, to study church grouping, present parish over-lapping, arrange the territory so that each rural inhabitant is a responsibility of some rural church. Rural churches should be grouped for cooperative endeavor and jointly support and use a director of Recreation and Religious Education.

At denominational colleges, Rural Departments should be maintained for special instruction to prospective rural ministers and church workers, and a circulating library at the college center would be beneficial to the country minister and laity.

Agricultural colleges, state or other educational institutions where rural departments are organized, should be cultivated as source of supply for Ministerial and Lay leaders.

The rural ministry should not be considered as a stepping stone to a city assignment or appointment. Better salaries in rural churches, building or a rural consciousness and better social and school privileges must be brought about if this suggestion is to be fair and practical.

It is recommended that the rural church must be well located, constructed and equipped as to make possible a modern program.

The country Church must be made the vital center of the life of the community ,and held responsible to spiritualize both its own departmental life and also the organized agencies of the community.

The absentee property owner must be led to see the necessity of dividing his support between the rural church near his property and the city church he and his family attend. Possibly the two pastors and the two district superintendents can arrange this after District Rural Commissions and City Missionary Societies have listed such cases.

People temporarily in a community should receive special attention from the rural church. This group include tenants, loggers, workers at oil centers ,harvest and other seasonal workers, summer boarders, cottagers and tourists.

In communities where the Methodist Episcopal Church has full responsibility, there the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension should render preferred aid and cooperate in adequately carrying for the work. Where the responsibility is divided with other denominations, equable adjustments should be made. To illustrate ,where four denominations are each competing in four towns, it would be better to agree to accept full responsibility in one than use missionary funds and manpower in carrying on a competitive denominational program.

KEEP FLORIDA CLEAN

If Florida is to come through the present real estate excitement without discredit or dishonor, it must be constantly on guard against the fake operator and the crooked operator, says the Tampa Tribune.

It must discourage the fellows who are in the business simply to add on their "commission" without regard to the real interests of either the seller or the buyer.

Unless the precautions are taken along these lines, Florida's present prosperity may suffer an embarassing aftermath.

Business is not good business, for a city or a section, unless it is legitimate business.

The customers, the commission houses and the fly-by-nighters now figuring in Florida's real estate operations, are doing us no good and, in the end, will do much harm.

One crooked deal will seriously effect a dozen honest deals. Every "sting" investor will influence others not to invest.

Florida cannot afford to run the risk. Every unreliable, conscienceless operator who is found in action in the state should be "spotted" and his prospective customers duly warned. The Florida field should be made uncomfortable and unprofitable for him. He should go back to his old line of peddling fake oil stock, hootch or peanuts. Florida has no room for him, as a real estate dealer.

We must keep Florida business clean—especially the real estate and development business. The way to do that is to promptly "spot" and "swat" the dishonest and the unauthorized trader. Usually his office is the sidewalk and his "properties" exist only on a sheet of scratch paper.

Every organization in the state, from the Florida Development Board down through the commercial bodies of every city and county and the accredited real estate association, should be alert and continuously active to keep Florida free of these pernicious pests.

LICENSES REVOCABLE

FORMER ELMIRA MINISTER SUMMONED TO FINAL REST IN HIS EIGHTY-THIRD YEAR

The Rev. Carlton C. Wilbor, a pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church in Elmira from 1887 to 1890 and superintendent of the Elmira district from 1891 to 1895, died recently at Elma, near Buffalo, aged eighty-three years.

Dr. Wilbor was born at Elma, Erie County, September 10, 1842. He received an education in the town schools and was licensed to exhort in 1866. His license to preach followed in 1867 by the Genesee Conference. He first served as a supply pastor at Alexander, Watertown, Sheldrake and Farmer.

Dr. Wilbor was a pioneer in the advancement of the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary at Lima, from which he graduated in 1868. Dr. Wilbor entered the Genesee Conference the same year. He studied at the Boston Theological Seminary in 1871 and preached at Maplewood, Mass., studied at Syracuse University, receiving the degree of doctor of philosophy from the latter institution. Later Syracuse awarded him the honorary degree of doctor of divinity.

Mr. Wilbor was appointed presiding elder of the Troy district in 1879. The Troy district was changed to the Elmira district in 1880. On October 1, 1887, he was appointed pastor of the First Methodist church at the Central New York Conference held in this city, and at the same meeting he was elected delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church which convened in 1888.

Following his pastorate here Dr. Wilbor was appointed superintendent of the Elmira district, remaining in that capacity until 1895. From 1896 to 1899 Dr. Wilbor served as president of Cazenovia Seminary, one of the best preparatory schools in the state. During 1900 and 1901 Dr. Wilbor was pastor of the Methodist church at Tonawanda, and in 1902 he became registrar of Syracuse University, in which position he remained eight years. He was a member of the Methodist General Conference of 1888, 1896, 1900, and was first reserve delegate in 1908.

Among the pastorates which Dr. Wilbor held were assignments to Hornell, the Plymouth Church of Buffalo, Cortland, Lockport, and the University Avenue church of Syracuse. Dr. Wilbor was eminently successful as a minister in this city, the membership of the First Methodist church increasing greatly under his pastorate. He established a quarterly register of the Elmira church, and wrote a history of the institution, which was published in the periodical he found.d.

United In Marriage

Dr. Wilbor was united in marriage with Miss Dora Hale, of Oriskany, who died several years ago. Two sons survive, Carlton H. Wilbor, of 311 West First street, Elmira, and Harold, of Buffalo.

Dr. Wilbor was a minister of exceptional ability and power. Thousands of Elmira citizens ,not only those who were members of or attended the First Methodist church while he was pastor, but others who had occasion to come in contact with him during his many years of residence in this city, testified to this fact.

During several years he spent the winters at Daytona Beach, Fla., and while there established a Bible class which became famous far and wide. Its membership was made up largely of winter tourists in Florida.

The final years of his life were spent in a little home he owned at Elma, just outside of Buffalo. There associating with friends in boyhood, he was a help and blessing to hundreds who sought his counsel and advice. Many sought the aged minister for spiritual advice and none ever came from him without having received that which they sought. His influence will live long in the lives of thousands of people.

The funeral was held at the family home at Elma. Burial was made in the cemetery at Trumansburg.

Note: The Rev. Mr. Wilbor spent a winter or two in St. Cloud during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Bowen. His passing will be greatly regretted by those who had the pleasure of meeting and knowing him.

FLYING VISITS

Our peregrinations may not be interesting unless they have not something out of the ordinary so my visit to New London and New Haven can only be slight impressions because of the only short stops spent in them. Groton across the Thames river from New London seems to be a quiet town and only residential. You pass through it as you go from Noank to New London. In the Revolutionary war the British massacred its people and there is a monument at the town commemorating the event.

New London is a very old town but it cannot be as old as old London in England. Some of its public buildings and residences must have been in Colonial times from their appearance, at least they are built in colonial style. It has a large submarine station and from the number of sailors hanging about its streets it has a marine training School or College. The station of the New York, New Haven and Boston rail-road is said to be one of the first ones built. It is quite a large building and in very good condition and looks as if would last for a hundred years yet and is covered with black smoke on its dark brick. New London seems a very busy city to judge from the number of trollies in its streets, its buses going to towns in all directions and distances and its innumerable autos coming and going about in its streets. Its main street seems well supplied with shops of all kinds and you can see here and there fine churches and other public buildings. The Bus ride from New London to New Haven over sixty miles goes through a beautiful country and over clean paved roads. The houses are mostly of old style and well built and residents probably have never required to have them remodeled. We passed through a number of small towns. The lay of the land is very different from Florida. It is all up hill and down hill and lots of cobble stones and bowlders and rocks innumerable. Hills and dales, and some pretty high hills and they would not forget them, especially if they have lived in Connecticut. I did not see much of New Haven as we spent our time in visiting friends, but in going through it, it is a fine busy city.

THINGS keep moving around this shop. Despite the fact that we are kept very busy we do not allow that fact to interfere with the quality of our work. Every repair job we tackle is finished in a workmanlike manner, and the person who ordered it is pleased to pay our moderate bill.

WHY IS A DEMOCRAT? WESTON BAILEY, 91, SAYS HE NEVER HAS BEEN ABLE TO FIND THE ANSWER; RECALLS STIRRING OLD DAYS

Weston Bailey, who July 13th celebrated his ninety-first birthday with friends here, has written letter telling of happenings in the stirring days of long ago. It was in Burlington township that he was born.

Among other things in his letter, Mr. Bailey mentions that Dr. Weston named him Weston. The doctor became sheriff and it was he who hung the first man to meet such a fate in Bradford county. The murderer's name was Doland and his wife was sentenced to die at the same time, but escaped paying the penalty.

"The first school I attended," says Mr. Bailey, "was at th pail factory on Sugar Creek about four miles from Towanda. There I sat on a slab with p-e-l-o-n's and a-b abs. There was no back to the bench which was too high for my feet to touch the floor. I walked two miles to school.

"I was in Towanda when William H Harrison was running for president. There was a big ox roast. I rode into Towanda from about a mile out on a hayrack—four-horse team. There were a good many men on the wagon and I was afraid I would not get a ride but just before they started someone hollered out, 'Here is a boy. Maybe he wants to ride.' I said 'Yes.'

"'Well what are you, a Whig or a Democrat?' I hollered 'A Whig.' 'Hop on,' he said.

Little did I know what a Whig or Democrat meant but I knew my father was a Whig.

"I remember the two parties had two liberty poles. The Democrats had a hickory pole and the Whigs a pine pole. The Democratic pole was about 75 feet tall and the Whig pole was about 110 feet tall, and the Democrats had a rooster in the act of crowing and the Whigs an Indian with a bow and arrow shooting at the rooster. My uncle, Adolphus Slater, furnished the Whig pole 110 feet long for $10.

"After the canal was finished I boated on it. I once bought a boat load of nut coal at Wilkes-Barre for 65 cents a ton and loaded it on the boat and sold it at Meshoppen for $2.50 a ton.

"I was at the Old Folks' celebration that kind the court house June 27 and there were 25 comrades at the gathering. We had a good time. I told some of my cousins I had rather lose $10 than not be there. They did justice by me. I spoke a piece I spoke in the academy at Lafayetville 72 years ago. We had one of the best times I ever expect to have in Towanda.

"I live at St. Cloud, Florida. I am visiting cousins and friends I expect for the last time.

"I worked on the North Branch canal and when 16 or 17 years old in three different places. First at the lock at Laceyville, second at Tuscarora Creek and third at Horsecave.

"Joe Dull and Dan Dull had the three million dollar contract and the canal. The paymaster when he paid me said that I was the best man on the job. This was like boarding but I had to work in the water most of the time. I helped clean out the river and make the pattern for the foundation for the dam. I liked to be in the water, but it was a dangerous job the water was so swift.

"My grandfather's name was Joshua Bailey. He moved from Mount Sugarloaf, Orange county, N. Y., and came to his farm when 23 years old and died on the same farm when he was 83 years old. John Bailey was my father's name. Five of my family were in the rebellion and my father was one of them. I am the only one living. I am proud of my country.

"I have voted for 16 Republican presidents. I voted in 1856 for John C. Fremont against President Buchanan, the only president Pennsylvania ever furnished. I am 91 and I never have found out what a person is a Democrat for unless to make hard times."—Towanda (Pa.) Review of July 20, 1925.

Torrens Title Law Sorely Needed in Florida

Under the present law of Florida, the abstract business is one of the heaviest burden an owner of Florida real estate has to bear. It is a burden, because it is so entirely useless. It permits private interest to levy what is practically a tax on transfers and thereby build up practical monopolies at the expense of the public. All this could be changed by a little sensible legislation.

Not long ago the commissioners of some country in Florida sold the county's abstract books to a private concern. This was done under the pretext that the proper official did not have time, with his multitude of other duties, to keep the county abstract books up to date, and the country could get a little ready money for them.

What rot! Any 12-year-old school boy, knowing that th commission had it within their power to provide the necessary increase in clerical help to keep the books up to date, would at once look for "the nigger in the wood pile."

This instance is only another reason why the real estate owners should demand a new law on the subject of titles, either the Torrens or some other equally effective and inexpensive. With the present activities in Florida real estate, and with the "stranglehold" within the grip of private interests, it would appear to be "awakening time." If Florida oversleeps on this subject the result is likely to be expensive. The snoozed-curve has lasted too long already.—Florida Earth.

A abstract and lawyer's offices in South Florida are today literally choked with deeds, mortgages and abstracts, while realty buyers and sellers clamor frantically for attention, to little purpose, all because of the ancient and burdensome system still surviving almost universally in the transfer of real estate.

With all our boasted progress in science, invention and the arts during the past century there has been absolutely no advance in the method of transfer o realty titles, barring the exception of a few localities that have adopted the Torrens system, and real estate interests are suffering tremendously in consequence. A hundred years ago if John Doe sold Rich. and Roe must hunt up a lawyer and have the title examined and approved before accepting the property. If Richard Roe sold the property the following day to John Smith similar previous examination of title would be of no avail and the new buyer would proceed to have the title examination work done all over again by another lawyer, and the same is true today. This antiquated process is slow enough at all times, but with the present bargain counter rush for South Florida property the delay is simply maddening and the wheels of legal machinery are literally flogged with a useless mass of work for which a heavy toll is exacted when the necessary papers are at length tardily ground out.

About seventy years ago Sir Robert Torrens was collector of the port at Melbourne, Australia. He observed the simplicity of the system whereby vessels changed ownership and the idea occurred to him, why not apply the same system to the transfer of real estate. His system is now in vogue in New Zealand, Australia and portions of the United States and Canada. In brief, the government operates all land transfer offices, a nominal sum being charged for issuing the certificate of title, the fee going into a guarantee fund whereby the owner of the land is protected against loss from any possible flaw in the title.

On the certificate of title are noted any liens or incumbrances against the property. Thus the present status of the title can be seen at a glance, so that the holder can readily borrow money on it without the expense, delays and vexatious ordinarily incident to the borrowing of money on real estate. When the property is sold the certificate of title is surrendered to the land office and another made out in the name of the new owner, with outstanding obligations noted thereon.

Florida now has a somewhat similar in win the state registry of motor car ownership, and it is working very well, the old certificate being surrendered and a new one made out when the car is sold. How long before we will adopt similar common-sence business methods in the transfer of real estate instead of pottering along with cumbersome methods that have been obsolete since the Stone Age?—Estero (Fla.) Eagle.

FOUNDER, PUBLISHER OF "THE BILLBOARD" DIES AT SARASOTA

SARASOTA, Fla., Aug. 1.—W. H. Donaldson, of New York and Cincinnati, founder and publisher of "The Billboard," died here today.

FLORIDA BOOM WILL CONTINUE SAYS NEW YORK EXPERT

As the result of a careful investigation of Florida land conditions, T. S. Knowlson, of New York, who recently spent three months in various parts of the state, says, according to an article in the New York Times for July 26, regarding the real estate activity that so far as the boom is like any other state boom it will follow the same course, and so far as it is different it will create a destiny of its own.

The Times articles continues:

"This is not as obvious as it sounds,' Mr. Knowlson explains, adding that it is easy to strike analogies between real estate developments in California and Oklahoma and those in Florida, and draw inferences which are apparently logical or a trifle damaging.

"There is the argument," says Mr. Knowlson, "that, as in other states, reckless land speculation raised prices to a figure which makes its purchase unprofitable, so in Florida we may expect to see corner lots sold at a price which no kind of financial ingenuity can turn into an advantage. But the buyer of a corner lot at $100,000 is not a fool. It must be presumed that he knows what he is doing and he gives no sign of pessimism. Admittedly, the figure is high, but no one knows that better than the purchaser himself.

"There are certain lots in Miami which were sold two years ago at $2,000. Their present selling price is $25,000. No wonder, then, that he market is brisk with buyers and sellers. The point is, how much higher will these prices go? Nobody knows, for at every turn one is met by the fact that Florida is different from anything of its kind that has gone before. Past booms are a guide in a general way, but they cannot so we as an exact measure for the present movement.

Country IS Interested

"For one thing the whole wealth of the United States is interested in Florida. Almost everybody of consequence appears to have a large holding there, and vast sums are being brought from other States for industrial and development purposes. The significance of the fact is this: That such names tend to generate deep confidence.

"People get the impression of strength, stability and reliability. They believe that such leadership is worth following. Hence, every year the crowd of visitors increases so rapidly that they cannot be properly accommodated, although strenuous efforts are to be made to avoid the shortage of rooms which marked the past reason. Hundreds of these visitors will become residents of Florida. They buy lots and arrange to build homes.

"A further fact which makes Florida different is that it is the last of the States to go through a development boom on a State-wide scale. This is unconsciously sensed by the thousands who read about it, and their interest is quickened to a pitch of excitement. During the season there is a spirit not unlike that of a boom on the Stock Exchange. It is easy and I suppose right and necessary to condemn such excitement, but when all the facts are considered it is as natural as the satisfaction of hunger.

"There is a third factor, stronger even than the foregoing, and that is climate. If this were not what it is there would be no boom such as we see today. Florida is unique. The summer is less wearing than in the South generally and much more bearable than in the North and Middle West. When you were smothering in the 90s we were fairly comfortable in the middle 80s. Besides, in June, July and August there is a cooling rain every afternoon ,and not only cooling but highly productive for crops and groves. So what with the breezes which blow from the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico, the rains that come with tropical regularity, the cool nights that impart a real quality to sleep. Florida has a summer climate to offer which can hardly be beaten anywhere. But the winter climate is the puller. Hot enough in the center and south to bathe during the day, it is sometimes just cold enough during evenings to make a fire attractive. When morning comes it is summer again. Even the critics of Florida are enthusiastic on this question of climate.

Florida is Different

"The profound interest in Florida is, in my opinion, based on these three factors. They give a distinction and a permanence to the movement which marks it off from others that have gone before. You cannot judge Florida solely by analogies in the past. Florida is different.

"When asked how long will the Florida boom last I reply that nobody knows. The indications point to a possible period of ten years before the top is reached. A real estate boom usually passes through three stages. The first is the sale of virgin soil in highly favored district or in vast acreages. The second stage is the resale in smaller tracts or in lots. The third stage is the period when the buyer buys for himself to keep for a home or to use for business. In Florida the vitality of the boom is such that these three stages are being vigorously prosecuted at the same time. Homes are being purchased every day. Acreage is being bought and sold on immense scale, and this is also true of smaller tracts.

"Nobody with a knowledge of facts doubts that the present boom will continue. The real question is how long? If in another state it lasted for eight years, the duration might be longer in Florida. The truth seems to be that the boom will be topographical, going from county and city to city, moving northward from the south. To cover a large state in this way takes time, and I do not see how it can be accomplished in less than ten years. Of course, this does not mean that boom opportunities and boom prices will last that length of time. It means that these conditions may last a year or two in a particular region, then give way to conditions which, though still good, are nearer the routine of other states.

"In some districts the ascent would seem to be complete. But in a hundred other places they are only just beginning to clear the land. They are operating the first step of what is perhaps to be a new city of 40,000 inhabitants, situated on a lovely lake. The outlook of the developer is therefore one which embraces some years of arduous work. They appear to have complete faith in themselves and their plans. Nothing stops. Everything moves.

WHY I BELIEVE JE SUS IS THE CHRIST

A Reply to J. P. Blosg Article

This Space Paid for by Karl Barth

I believe that Jesus Christ was conceived of the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate was crucified dead and buried and that on the third day he arose from the dead as written in the Holy Scriptures. I believe this because the scriptures prove it and second because the scriptures are the written record of the life of Christ written by his apostles after his death. By scriptures I refer to the New Testament.

Christ while here on earth promised to send to his apostles the Holy Spirit which would bring to their remembrance all things that Jesus said and did. These apostles after the crucifixion wrote the gospels or life of Christ. Historical Criticism or Christian Evidences proves beyond a doubt that the New Testament was written by the authors ascribed to them. There are some who thru ignorance I gim that the books of the New Testament were not written till about the second century A. D. but as I have said, this is thru ignorance. I here very briefly would like to illustrate one of the methods for fixing the early and true date for the New Testament. This is by means of quotations.

Quotations from a book like copies of it, catalogues of its parts, and translations of it, are self-evident proofs of its previous existence, seeing that it is impossible to make quotations from a book not yet written. The early church fathers, some who lived immediately after, quote and knew the apostles and others who give the recognized authors the honor ascribed to them as the writers of lived immediately after, quote and cite the scriptures.

Some of those writers whose writings are of such are Polycarp, Irenaeus, Justin Martyr, Papias, Origen, Clement, Tertullian and many others of a later date. These men made many and copious quotations from the books of the New Testament, so many and so copious that the opinion has sometimes been expressed that the whole New Testament, if it were lost, could be reproduced out of the Christian writings of the first four centuries. IF THE PERIOD BETWEEN THE WRITERS JUST NAMED AND THE APOSTLES CAN BE SPANNED BY A SUCCESSION OF WRITERS MAKING QUOTATIONS FROM THE BOOK IN QUESTION, THE EXISTENCE OF THESE BOOKS WILL BE TRACED TO THE AGE OF THE APOSTLES BY EVIDENCE ABSOLUTELY CONCLUSIVE. In the limited space I can name and cite only two of the many writers.

I shall begin this line of evidence with I renaeus, a writer who mentions so many of the New Testament books by name that he might also be classed with those who left catalogues. I renaeus was born in the year 135 A. D. and died about the year 200. He speaks of having seen Poly carp in Smyrna in his early youth, and so we suppose that Smyrna was his birth place. Later in life his home was at Lyons, in Gaul, where he was made Bishop in the year 177. Previous to his ordination he visited Rome as the bearer of a letter from certain members of the church of Lyons who were in prison and awaiting martyrdom, to the Bishop of the church at Rome. From all this it is apparent that he had means of knowing what books of the New Testament were in use within the period of his remembrance, in Asia Minor, in Gaul and in Rome. His memory reached back within the first half of the second century. His quotations and citations may be classified as follows:

He says that what the Apostles first preached they afterward "handed down to us in the Scriptures;" that they were filled with the Holy Spirit before they preached; that Matthew "issued a written gospel" while Peter and Paul were preaching at Rome; that Mark, "The disciple and interpreter of Peter," wrote what had been preached by Peter; that Luke "The companion of Paul, recorded in a book the gospel preached by him;" and that "John, the disciple who had leaned on the Lord's breast, published a gospel during his residence in Ephesus." He father claims that the ground on which these Gospels rest was as firm that even the heretics against whom he wrote and those whose doctrines were condemned by them, were constrained to acknowledge them, some acknowledging one, and some another. He makes other remarks concerning the Gospels equally exlisit, and his quotations from them are very numerous.

Irenaeus also makes quotations from Acts and twelve of Paul's Epistles are quoted and the authorship ascribed to Paul. So we see that Irenaeus is strong proof for the Apostolic authorship of the New Testament. Next let us notice Polycarp himself.

Polcarp of Smyrna is one of the most conspicuous character of the early church. Irenaeus, who when a boy was personally acquainted with him, says of him that "he was instructed by Apostles," that he had "CONVERSED WITH MANY WHO HAD SEEN CHRIST;" that he was appointed an overseer of the church in Smyrna by Apostles; that he lived to be a very old man; and that he suffered "a glorious martyrdom." "To these things," adds Irenaeus, "all the Asiatic churches testify, as do all those men who have succeeded Polycarp down to the present time."

Polycarp was baptised at the age of thirteen about the year 70 A. D. or near the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. He was twelve years old when Paul was beheaded, A. D. 68. He may have seen the Apostle when a child. After his baptism he lived thirty years cotemporary with the Apostle John, and as John spend the latter part of his life at Ephesus, only fifty miles from Smyrna. Polycarp may have seen him and heard him preach. Furthermore, as Philip's home in the latter [illegible] at Hierapolis, only about 100 miles east of Smyrna, Polycarp may have seen that Apostle, and he may, in the course of his life have met with others. So we see he as in fact and truth "instructed by the Apostles." His long life, reaching back into the very midst of the apostolic age, and extending down to the middle of the second century, enabled him to know what writings of the Apostles were in use almost from the beginning, and it made him familiar with the first appearance of all their later productions. The books which he recognized as apostolic must have been so, and what he taught concerning them was propagated in Gaul by his pupil Irenaeus, in Asia by other pupils, and in Rome by himself, for in the imperial city he in person defended the Faith.

Polycarp in his writing recognizes as apostolic the greater number of the books of the New Testament. Several whole chapters, and large parts of others might be styled a patch work of quotations, so quotations being taken from the first three Gospels, Acts, all of Paul's Epistles except Titus and Philemon, the First Epistles of John, and the First of Peter. The genuineness of all these books is therefore supported by this invaluable evidence.

Irenaeus and Polycarp are but two of the many authors who testify to the apostolic authorship of the New Testament. The gap from the second and third century has been spanned and how a doubt concerning the New Testament books can remain in any rational being is beyond my understanding.

Next I will prove the Diety of Jesus who is called the Christ. The fact that this person lived in as certain as that of the life of Washington, Napoleon or Cæsar. The scriptures and those who knew the writers of the scripture, testify that Jesus lived and walked among men. Josephus the historian on page 364 book XVIII and Chap. III mentions Jesus and gives to him the name Christ. So to doubt the existence of the Founder of Christianity is disbelieve all history.

The question is—was Jesus what he claimed to be. Was he truly the Son of God? Jesus was raised in a little village of Palestine like many another boy of his age, without opportunity for an education or learning. Yet he became the greatest Philosopher of all ages, the apex of wisdom, the zenith of intellect. Who has surpassed him? Let us notice a few peculiarities about the wisdom of Christ which argue with great force his divinity.

He made no mistakes. Other great teachers as Socrates, Plato and Aristotles, often confess their errors. But made no such confessions. And the shrewd enemies who watched his every word and work, failed to find a mistake. A man who never made a mistake, how do you account for this strange phenomenon?

He spoke without effort. Other famous men often reach dizzy summits, but it is after long and labored effort. But Jesus speaks the highest truth in simplest tones, and there is no sign of weariness as more than in the mountain spring from which fresh, sweet water is always gushing.

He spoke without hesitation or consideration. The wisest men hesitate and consult before venturing an answer on great questions. But Christ, whatever the question always answered promptly, and without counsels, on the mountain side, in the temple, on the low of a boat or wherever he might be this was true. His wisdom came from above.

Jesus never expressed a doubt. Even great Socrates often left his disciples in doubt. Of immortality he said, "If death is a removal hence to another place, and if what is said of death is true, then those who live in Hades are henceforth immortal." And among his just words, after receiving the fatal cup, he said, "The hour of separation is come; I go to die, you to live; but as to which of us is destined to an improved being I know not." But however intricate and difficult the theme, Christ always spoke with absolute assurance.

He combined marvelous sweep, perfection and power. Read the parable of the prodigal son. Note its mastery of principles; its breath of vision; its knowledge of the human heart; its simplicity of definition; and its grouping and grouping of details. One might well attempt to brighten the sun or sweeten the rose as to try to improve this masterpiece in composition. And Dickens, who was supreme in the pathetic style, when asked for the most pathetic story in literature answered, "The Prodigal Son."

His teaching are not in big bulk. We regret that no shorthand reporter was there to catch every word as the Master uttered them, and so we have little of his teachings. Augustine need thirty volumes to systematize his theology; and Calvin used forty; and Paul writes more of the New Testament than does its Lord. We can easily read all he said in an hour or two. He seemed not to care to preserve words, but cast them abroad like the sower does the seed, knowing that they would not return unto him void, but would accomplish that wherunto they were sent.

How Mr. Unbeliever do you account for this. There must be a solution for this strange problem. What is it?

It was not his long life and rich experience. Socrates was three score and ten when he drank the fatal cup; and Plato was eleven years older when he died. But Christ was only thirty three when they nailed him to the cross.

It was not Jesus's superior advantages. The world's famous teachers have generally been life long students under the most favorable circumstances. Plato, Aristotle, Teno, and others, spent their lives in studying books, and listening to living teachers. And they traversed the world in search of knowledge. They sat at the feet of the priests, sages and philosophers of Egypt, India, Italy and Greece. But Christ had no schools except the very poor ones of his people, and no book except the Old Testament, and he was too busy at the carpenter's bench to go to the world's famous teachers, and there were no great ones in Galilee.

These manifestations of divine wisdom can only be explained by attributing to Jesus Sonship with the God of the universe. "For without science and learning he has shed more light on thing human and divine than all other scholars and philosophers combined. Without the eloquence of the schools he has spoken such words of beauty and power as were never spoken before or since. Without writing a single line, he has set in motion more pens, furnished themes for more sermons, orators, and sublime poems and works of art than whole armies of great men of ancient and modern times. He has built a pyramid of knowledge to which no man has made an addition in two thousand years."

A great question on which the Deity of Jesus hangs is the resurrection. Did he conquer death and rise again the third days? Let us gather some of the proof of his resurrection. The greatest proof is the influence the resurrection had on his followers.

It must be easily confessed that before the crucifixion his disciples were anything but ideal followers of their master. They were slow to learn, and selfish; and in his hour of sore need one betrayed him and all forsook him and fled. And when he was crucified what would one naturally expect of them, crushed in spirit and disappointed in hope, to disperse and sink into oblivion, "leaving only the record of another prophets' failure to be reckoned with that of Theudas, and Judas of Galilee, and similar sporadic flashes of Jewish fanaticism? But we find nothing of the kind. Those arrant cowards become bold as lions, defying both the religious errors of the Jew and the political rage of the Romans. Their soul-vision is clear, and their voices ring out, clear toned like trumpets, as they proclaim the sweet story of their risen Lord. All this must be accounted for every effect has a cause, and this effect could "no more have arisen out of nothing, or come about by chance, than our great modern railroad system could have arisen spontaneously in a land where iron is unknown, or have been developed without the brain of a Watt and the genius of a Stephenson."

It was the triumph of truth in the face of opposition. Ballard says: "If we can imagine a lion, a tiger and a wolf unite in desperate effort to destroy a lamb—and failing, we should have a fair parallel to what actually happened in human society at the commencement of the Christian era. The practical alliance between Jewish hate, Roman might, and Greek subtlety, against the infant Christian faith is absolutely without parallel in history." But in the face of this mighty alliance the new doctrine spread with wonderful rapidity. The first sermon gained three thousand converts; a second sermon five thousand; and soon these converts were no longer counted but referred to as multitudes so that in the brief record of the book of Acts not less than half a million converts to Christianity were made. And within twenty five years after the crucifixion the unhesitating belief in the Resurrection was established thru out the then known world.

Many of these converts were from the Jews, including priests, and other great men like Saul of Tarsus. And if the reader think men of this kind are easily converted, let him try to induce some modern Rabbi to accept the Christ.

And as to the persecutions encountered in this work, neither the language of men nor angels can do Justice to its horror, or to the heroism of those who endured it. But a single quotation from Lecky must suffice: "We read of Christians bound to chairs of red hot iron, while the stench of the uncovered bodies rose in a suffocating cloud to heaven; of others, torn to the very bone by shells or hooks of iron; of holy virgins given over to the lust of gladiators, or the mercies of the pander; of few, hundred and twenty seven sent on one occasion to the mines each with one leg scrorred by a hot iron, and an eye scooped from the socket; of fires so slow that the victims writhed for hours in their agony; of tortures prolonged and varied three entire days. For the love of their Divine master, for the cause which they knew to be true, men and weak girls, endured these things when one word would have freed them from their suffering."

On the night of our Lords betrayal the Savior instituted this Supper know as the Lord's Supper, and from that day to this it has been observed wherever Christianity has gone. In fact this institution has always been part of the Christian religion.

What is the cause which produced this unique institution? It could not have been borrowed from Judaism, for it ignores the very heart of their memorial rite; the blody sacrifice. It would also shock the Jews to have the Messiah represented in any sense as a sacrifice. Neither could it have come from Greek or Roman mythology, for there is nothing there to suggest it. And if Christ did not rise from the grave the disciples would not observe it, for in that case it was the proclamation of a failure on the part of their Lord. But they did observe it, and wherever they went preaching "Jesus and the resurrection," this memorial feast was made a prominent part of the worship of the churches which they established.

But the strangest thing is yet to be said, viz; that this custom arose on the very spot, and immediately following the time of the crucifixion. Eborard says that "in the whole sphere of criticism there is no absurdity more uncritical than the idea that a rite which universally prevailed should have grown up accidentally and gradually, especially a rite of such marked peculiarity." But if we accept the New Testament account of the origin, purpose and promulgation, then all is simple and reasonable.

From the Exodus, the Sabbath day was a day of rest and worship." Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is a sabbath unto Jehovah thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servants, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days Jehovah made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore Jehovah blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it"

Exodus 20:8-11. The sabbath was sacred to every Jew. Men naturally love and venerate ancient customs, often simply because they are ancient. But this day was not only heavy with age, but it commemorated two of the grandest in the history of the world, the creation and the deliverance from Egyptian bondage (Dut. V. 15), but it gives place to the Lords Day, and becomes commemorative of two grander events; THE NEW CREATION IN CHRIST, AND DELIVERANCE FROM SIN. And this monument, like the Supper, began in Jerusalem, and just one week after the resurrection of the Christ. It would be absolutely impossible to induce the American people to observe the fourth of June instead of the fourth of July in commemoration of the Declaration of Independence; and it would be equally impossible to induce them to so observe the fourth of July, if such Declaration ever took place. Yet the best people of the world for nineteen centuries have been observing the Lords Day: have reared a monument in memory of an event which never occurred, if so be that Christ was not. The tall white shaft, the highest monument in the world, which lifts its pinnach hat, the clouds over Washington City, could never have been built if Washington had not been the savior of his people; neither could these two towering monuments: the Lord's Supper and the Lord's Day, have their glorious history and sacred significance if Christ had not been "declared the Son of God with power by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom 1:4).

The New Testament is the record of the Life of Jesus by those who knew him best and were filled with the Holy spirit. Jesus lived among men, suffered on the cross, was crucified dead and buried. God his Father raised him from the dead and he has gone back to the Father from whence he came. Christianity has stood the storm of criticism of two thousand years and it remains like the rock of Gebraltar unharmed and unharmable. Those who have attack the word of God have gone the way of all the earth and the Blessed Book remains, believed by the majority of the civilized peoples of the world to be the word of God. Mr. Unbeliever whoever you may be, your body will go back to dust, your flesh will be eaten by the worms and the Bible will still be here. Your puny efforts to criticise is absurd and ridiculous the discrepancies and tangles which you find in the Bible are really in your mind and not the Sacred word.

We are but human, how can we fully understand the infinite? Those who claim to be rationalist and free thinkers as generally the most narrow of men. Rationlist please explain rationally, the cause of the the earth, because it is an effect, very effect must have a cause, the existence of life, both plant and animal, where matter came from? What causes the suns heat? Who designed the universe, for it is a perfect design? Why can science cause life scientifically? Explain these things Mr. Rationalist if you can. But it can't be done. If you can not understand earthly things, how do you expect to understand heavenly things?

Sallie's Temptations

Sallie Learns of an Engagement

I took an hour from my work during the week to fill my regular engagement at the beauty-shop— my one concession to my former life On the afternoon of a day that had been very hard, I asked Collette for a facial pack. It always refreshes me, the sweet-scented cream, the hot towels, the massage and the pungent witch-hazel, followed by ice.

Everyone went to Collette's. Indeed it was more like a salon with it's buzz of small talk. Each operator had her own little room but it was quite customary for anyone recognizing a voice to scream the latest bit of gossip from one booth to the other.

The room was unusually quiet this afternoon and I was relaxing under a towel weighted with steam that completely enveloped my face.

Suddenly, I recognized a voice. It came from the next booth.

"Oh, I say, Valerie, have you seen my ring?" It was Anne Codington's voice.

"Your ring? What did you mean —ring? I am that excited. What is this anyway, an announcement party. Well, I'll be right in."

My heart stood still. What ring? What? Then all the courage, all the indifference I had built around myself in the last few months were as naught.

Could it be that Anne and Curtiss were really engaged and that I should hear it in such a place? Oh, I was grateful for that towel and for it's kind folds which hid my face.

Silence for a while. The operators were oh, so quiet that they, too, might gather in the details of a story that would entertain their fashionable clientele.

Light foot steps—Valerie going to Anne. I counted them as they fell.

"Ohhhh Anne! It's a dream! Well I don't have to guess whose it is, the way he's been rushing you about. You lucky girl. Landing the catch of the season. Dog gone!"

Anne snickered.

"He is sweet, she said.

"Sweet", so that was all she thought of him. I was sick with the thought and something was the matter with my heart. What made it feel like a stone, weighting me down, dragging me under and leaving me listless without any desire to live. I couldn't faint, if I could just keep the towels on a little longer and then, after Anne and Valerie had gone, I would go home without either of them knowing that I had heard.

But even facials come to an end. I managed to be perfectly quiet until the operator was through, then putting on my hat, I walked hurriedly out of the booth and along the corridor to the front of the hall.

Valerie! God help her to keep her mouth shut. She didn't. It was impossible with Valerie and there seemed to be any number of people standing or sitting about.

"Hello, Sallie, have you heard about Anne?" she asked.

"Why, no," I summoned as much interest as possible in my voice.

They started at me without pity, gleefully eager for some sign that might add zest to their story when they told it outside.

"She's gonna marry Curtiss Wright. Has the most gorgeous ring—a sapphire—."

That was the last straw. Because in discussing rings once I had told Curtiss that the ring of m ydreams was a single square sapphire with dancing lights.

"Come on back Sallie and look at it. I think Anne's still there," she tugged at m yarm.

I couldn't speak. I couldn't, when one is crushed in spirit and soul. Little do they think what effect their movements will have on the crowd nor thinking care I did the only thing I could have done. I drew away from her and walked straight out of the door with my head in the air.

I don't know why the shock was so enormous. I had known that Anne and Curtiss were together most of the time and hostesses had been putting them together for months.

But it's one thing to expect a thing or even dread it and another to have it actually jrcome about. I tried to lose myself in my work but when one is twenty, there's something you want more than work to fill the empty spaces in a young girl's heart.

Things were reminding me always of love. At night time the soft, languine twilights would awaken strange longings in my innermost being. A strain of music would make tears of loneliness stand in my eyes. And all the time I had the feeling that "they" were gloating over Anne's conquest of Curtiss Wright.

It wasn't that I wanted Curtiss if he were satisfied with the girl of his choice. My pride kept me from that. But there was nothing to prevent — hope for him which I knew was eternal and could never die.

A SWEET JOB

W. N. U. SERVICE (Copyright by W. G. Chapman)

BERTRAM DARAND, M. D., almost passed by. Only the most capricious of impulses turned him in at the huge, imposing gray stone mansion of the Coswells, and so brought him knowledge of the one matter which, above everything else, he wanted to know. This supremely important question was: What had happened to Kitty Hewitt?

It had been amazing to him how fear for her safety had, during the past week, dominated his thoughts; the more amazing whenever he reckoned the hours—not four, altogether—through which she had been an actual factor in his life. Were he merely to obliterate the memory of half of one night, drop out one short flight of time between two in the morning and dawn, Kitty Hewitt—and whatever might have happened to her—would become nothing to him. Yet Bertram Darand, M. D., could not have obliterated that memory had he wanted to; and, decidedly, he did not want to.

That night, at the beginning of those marvelous hours, he had been in bed at his somewhat shabby lodgings—an ordinary, insignificant, unsuccessful young doctor.

Outside in the street, at the door below his window, had stood that girl—that strange girl who had breathlessly summoned him: "Oh, hurry, please! Surgical bag, doctor!" She proved to be young and fair and alive and most extraordinarily alive. Her name, she said, was Hewitt.

One of the gang had been shot; a young man he was, scarcely more than a boy—and rather handsome. Bertram recognized the pale face: Eddie Pellen—"Eddie the Immune," newspapers called him—monotonous gangster, and so serious was his wound that he was likely to die; that was why the sinister, pig-eyed man called Grame, who watched over him, had sent Hewitt—Kitty, Grame called her—in such haste for a surgeon. It was too late now to correct her mistake in the man she had brought, so Grame had set Bertram Darand, M. D., to work; and there, in the bedroom of the flat, with the lovely Kitty Hewitt helping him, he had executed the most skilful operation of his life to save the wounded gunman, "Eddie the Immune." And when the job was done, Bertram knew that Grame meant to take no chances with him; Grame meant to make him perfectly "safe." He had paid him a generous fee, but in the same moment posted men to follow him from the flat and "get" him.

Beyond a bit of a doubt they would have finished him but for what Kitty Hewitt did. For she, who had by mistake brought him into that place, also got him out and away, scot free. Then she had disappeared—to return to them. But what was the price she had to pay? How had the gang finished her for double-crossing them?

It tormented Bertram Darand whenever he had thought about her; and this torment formed a habit of surprising him at sudden intervals when he was consciously occupying his time with other matters. After all, who was Kitty Hewitt—and what was her relation to those men? There was nothing he could do in her behalf; for her punishment—death or whatever else the evil-looking Grame had decreed—must, several days ago, have been wrought.

Funny enough, Kitty Hewitt's punishment visualized itself in startling images at the hour of half-past four on this cool November afternoon as Bertram, having concluded a period of formal idleness at his down-town office (where patients, as he insisted, came at rare as January strawberries), was sauntering northward along Lake Shore Drive. Approaching the imposing gray stone residence of Hugh Coswell, he recalled that Mrs. Coswell was entertaining.

Bertram loathed afternoon tea. He was not the sort of chap one encounters at stuffy functions of the sort, surrounded by platoons of chattering, fashionably gowned women; there was none of that about young Doctor Darand. Yet he turned and went in. An obsequious footman in mulberry livery took his things and another ushered him toward Mrs. Coswell's enormous drawing room, done in ivory and gold and long with tapestries; and at once Bertram became the center of an avoiding circle.

"Bertram, where have you been keeping yourself?"

"You can't tell me you're so frightfully busy yet!"

"My dear, one must resort to tonsilitis at least to have any hope of seeing Doctor Darand these days!"

Arista Coswell was known as a smart hostess; today the yellow-panelled music room and the spacious lounge beyond were cluttered with tables of the Chinese gambling game mah-jong, and for the instruction of novitiates at the game and as a sort of umpire to smooth over perplexities of the scoring, a Chinese girl in colorful costume moved gracefully from table to table.

Standing up from a table where she settled a dispute over the scoring, her gaze encountered Bertram's. He stared at her, suddenly startled. For she was not Chinese at all—she was a white girl; she was the girl who had summoned him that amazing night; the girl who had been the messenger of Grame and the friend of Eddie Pellen, "Eddie the Immune"—she was Kitty Hewitt!

So Grame had not "got" her! Bertram thrilled at the sight of her, and drew a deep, exultant breath. Kitty Hewitt, this fair, graceful girl, had not been too outrageously punished because of him!

Gazing across the room, she recognized him.

"How do you do?" he murmured stupidly.

Kitty Hewitt bowed prettily and made a slight, graceful gesture with her beautiful hands, in keeping with her part as a Chinese girl.

When Arista Coswell was beside him. "This is Miss Wing," she said to Bertram. "She's wonderful at mah-jong. Have you met her?"

"Yes," answered Bertram uncertainly. "Yes, I—I know her." Stupid he felt—yet to deny acquaintance with her would have been more stupid still.

Miss Wing interposed, in her pleasing, light manner: "Doctor Darand goes about so much."

The hostess was saying: "Then you must know the game, Bertram. Just find a place somewhere, will you?" And, smiling, she moved on.

Miss Wing, teacher of mah-jong, smiled even more placidly and prettily, and turned to the nearest table to continue her picturesque profession.

Watching her, gay and smiling as she moved among the tables, young Doctor Darand compared her with the other girls in the room; and saw no one to rival her in class, in personality, in aliveness and grace. The loveliest of the débutantes, the most attractive of the younger married set, failed to match up with this Kitty Hewitt, companion of gunmen. Abruptly Bertram crossed to a window.

"She's here," he said to himself, "to find out something for them, of course. Clever, her learning mah-jong and setting up as an expert. She can get in anywhere with it!"

Bertram thought of that meager flat wherein Grame had greeted him and set him to work on the gunshot wound of "Eddie the Immune." Then he looked across at the bright figure in the blue and rose silk costume, moving so blithely between the tables; and his shoulders jerked in an involuntary shudder. What was the real plan behind Kitty Hewitt's presence here?

Doctor Darand sauntered back into the mah-jong room, his nervousness lessening. Nothing had happened, and now people were going; groups at the tables were breaking up; by the thousands of dollars each moment the loot in jewels and platinum was disappearing. Miss Wing had deserted her tables. He caught a glimpse of bright blue silk among the green palms of the sun room beyond, and, entering, found her.

"Well?" he challenged.

"Very," she assured him confidently.

He closed a heavy glass door which shut off the sun room from the lounge; the door at the other end was already shut; they were alone.

"So," he said, half accusingly, "Grame didn't do much to you!"

"Thanks to you, no." There was a note of gratitude in her voice.

"Thanks to me?"

"Of course. Didn't you keep quiet? You were wise enough to stay away from making trouble. That's what saved me when I went back."

"What's the game here?" he demanded abruptly.

"Why do you want to know?" she continued.

"Oh—harmless curiosity, perhaps."

"And if I don't tell you, what'll you do? Call the police?"

"Perhaps," he threatened.

"Really?" she said lightly. "And if I do tell you—then what?" Her blue eyes regarded him for a second, then she glanced away casually and smiled.

"Maybe it would surprise you if you knew what a moral errand brought me here today." She seated herself on the top of a low, white-enameled stepladder, used for reaching the flowers which grew in boxes and baskets hung from the glass arch of ceiling, and, reaching up, plucked a crimson petunia and tossed it down to him. Anyone glancing through the glass door would believe that Bertram Darand was merely playing with the pretty mah-jong teacher; and no one, just now, would interrupt.

"I assure you," she went on coolly, "that what you saw here—my teaching people to play mah-jong—is the most evil part of my work in this house. The other part is trying a mystery."

"Mystery," he asked, "of what?"

"Lost jewels, doctor. A wonderful string of pearls. The price paid was, I understand, thirty-seven thousand dollars."

"Price, paid by whom?"

Kitty Hewitt glanced toward the glass doors; no one was near; she leaned toward him. "Our host—who ought to be here today, wouldn't you say—but isn't."

"Hugh Coswell?" Bertram's eyebrows lifted. "Why, I happen to know he's out of town on business. What about the pearls?"

"That's it, doctor—what about them?"

She reached up and plucked another petunia. "Last week, in New York, Hugh Coswell bought a certain string of pearls for thirty-seven thousand cash, and brought them with him to Chicago. Now, thirty-seven thousand is quite a price—even for Hugh Coswell—to pay for a string of pearls. He'd hardly forget he had them; he'd mention them, wouldn't you think? Well—he hasn't."

"How do you know?"

"Oh—I have ways of knowing. Pearls, pearls, is a subject I've been bringing up between squabbles of mah-jong all afternoon. I've made myself almost a pest with my passion for pearls; I've started conversation about them until I flatter myself I know who possesses about every fine string of pearls in so-called Chicago society. The surprising fact, really the shocking fact, Doctor Darand, is that Mrs. Coswell owns practically no pearls at all; she does not like them; she prefers sapphires; all her friends know it; surely her husband must know, yet he's recently invested thirty-seven thousand dollars in a string of pearls.

"Perhaps he is playing pearls for a rise, Doctor Darand? Perhaps it is merely an investment—what do you think? Perhaps, on the other hand, these pearls mean definite danger to our host who happens to be away. He and his wife are supposed to be happy; they have three beautiful children; his home is a great advantage to him in the important position of public trust he holds. He could scarcely survive a scandal; yet, believe me, one threatens him and this house, Doctor Darand. Believe me, no talk of his friends, no argument, no persuasion can save him. There is only one way out for him. I am here today to help prepare the way."

"You mean," he accused, "Pellen is preparing to hold Coswell up and shoot him!"

She raised her head and looked up at the flowering basket above. "You're thinking about that policeman," she said, "that Eddie happened to— Tell me, doctor, don't surgeons ever kill people by mistake?"

"By mistake, of course," he admitted.

"That's how that killing happened, by mistake," Kitty Hewitt said emphatically. "This won't be like that at all. This is going to be a sweet job, I'm perfectly sure."

"A sweet job?" said Bertram.

"I'm sure of it."

She stepped down from the ladder blithely and stood, slight and graceful in her bright Chinese garments, gazing up at him, smiling. "I'll give you a ring at your office tomorrow. I must be going now."

Next day, toward noon, as he sat idly in his down-town office, where so few patients found their way, the telephone rang sharply. It was Kitty Hewitt's voice—and at sound of it Doctor Darand's heartbeats quicksened.

"Do you know the cement roads northwest of the city?" she began abruptly. "Do you know the Hand road? Well, step where it turns off and I'll be there at nine tonight. And wear evening clothes, doctor; dinner coat."

"What?" he said in wonderment.

"Evening clothes, or nothing doing."

Ironically he asked: "Surgical bag, too?"

She replied lightly: "You might bring it. No harm to have it along. But this is a sweet job, I told you; an evening clothes job. Dinner and dance. Well—you're coming?"

"I am."

"You'll be alone, of course; that's understood!"

She hung up. And in utter amazement Bertram whistled.

Night came on clear and cool. Thinking of Kitty Hewitt, thinking of riding with her, of an expedition with her to he did not know where, Bertram's thought strayed back to a wet, pitch-dark night, of a wild flight through slippery, silent city streets. This night was crisp, there was a touch of frost in the air, and the road, which made the approach to the meeting place—that appointed spot at the beginning of the Hand road—a wide, smooth cement highway running past farmlands.

He wondered, with redoubled doubt now, what could be the "sweet job" which Kitty Hewitt and Eddie Pellen and Grame had on hand out here tonight. Was it a frameup? Was he merely being tricked and played with to be sent out here in evening clothes? Yet, as he approached the Hand road, he felt his pulses hurrying and his fingers became more tense upon his wheel. His headlights found the fork of the cement highway leading to the north; he slowed down; then headed into the Hand road and stopped the car. From the darkness a voice, Kitty Hewitt's voice, hailed: "Doctor!"

"Hello," he answered; and he opened the door on her side.

She said: "Don't get out; I'm getting in." A second later she was up beside him.

He asked, not quite steadily: "Anyone with you?"

"Not now," she answered. "I'm ready, doctor; go on."

"Where to?"

"Right ahead; when we leave the road, I'll tell you."

"Watch now!" she warned him, after a few minutes. "Slower! There it is; the turn to the right."

The watchman, with flashlight in hand, cautiously approached. "Name, sir?" he demanded; and Bertram, without yet knowing what he exhibited, showed his card.

"All right, sir." The gate was opened, and the car proceeded between trees and thick shrubbery into an open space across which the road curved up to a large, lighted house.

She Seated Herself on the Top of a Low, White-Enameled Stepladder, and Reaching Up, Picked Up a Crimson Petunia and Tossed It Down to Him

"This is no roadhouse," Bertram announced rather foolishly.

"Well," said Kitty Hewitt, as though thinking it over, "hardly."

"Whose is this place?" demanded Bertram, as he halted his car on the lawn where other cars, to the number of five, were standing parked in a dark, unattended row. They all seemed to be roadsters and while he was noting this and puzzling over it, Kitty Hewitt offered explanation: "People come here by pairs, doctor; and they do their own driving. No chauffeurs."

"Oh!" he nodded.

"If you had a chance to look at the license numbers of those cars," she continued in a half whisper, "you'd find them all in a sequence. One person owns them all; they're used only to come back and forth from here."

"The devil!" he muttered; then repeated: "Whose place is this?"

She answered now: "Ours, as much as anyone else's tonight. Come in and see."

They stepped down upon the lawn. From behind the drawn blinds of the house came muted measures of a tooting, jangling jazz orchestra, the thump of drums, the moan of saxophones and the wail of a violin. Kitty Hewitt moved forward and went up the stone steps, Bertram following. Above the door glowed an electric bulb in an iron basket, and as they came into the circle of light the door opened softly before them.

"Mr. Larchmore's guests," Bertram heard her say to the man at the door as she gave him a card, evidently Larchmore's card; and the man stepped back, holding open the door.

Kitty Hewitt went in, Bertram following, and the door was closed behind him.

"I'll take your things, sir," offered the manservant; and a lady's maid came forward to help Kitty Hewitt with her wrap.

As Bertram watched this amazing girl who had led him into two adventures—tonight's yet to be known—his eyes lighted with admiration.

"Ready?" she turned to him gaily. "You haven't had dinner?"

"No."

"Come along, then." She led the way through to the dining room and across to a table set for two.

The dance floor beyond the row of tables was small and intimate; and upon it, to the mad harmonies of the jazz orchestra, four or five couples danced—danced with a certain pagan abandon. With a start Bertram recognized Hugh Coswell, the eminently respectable president of the Midwest Trust company, the husband of Arista, and the father of three children and he was not dancing with Arista—no, nor with any of her friends. The partner who clung to him was a petite, Titian-haired young woman whom Bertram vaguely recognized; some one had pointed her out to him once, he remembered, and mentioned her name. Suddenly the name bobbed into his mind: "Sally Keddleston."

Four other men, with partners, were dancing; they were all older than Hugh Coswell; they were gray-haired, all of them over fifty. Bertram knew two of them; men whom many thousands in Chicago knew by reputation, at least; by good reputation. And each man held in his arms a yellow-haired or a brunette Sally Keddleston of his own.

Bertram's friends snirked when they recognized him; and they waved and called cordial—too cordial—greetings.

Confused for the moment, he brought his gaze about to the table as a waiter placed a cocktail before him. "Dinner, sir?" the man asked.

"Dinner," replied Bertram mechanically. Evidently, serving so few people, the establishment offered a prepared meal.

Suddenly Bertram recollected the pearls which—so Kitty Hewitt had said—Hugh had bought in New York, and not for Arista. Glancing toward the dancers, he looked for pearls upon Sally Keddleston. Jewels she wore, plenty of jewels, but no rope of pearls.

Once more, as he watched, Kitty Hewitt seemed to read his thoughts. "He's not given them to her yet, I guess," she murmured. "That makes it a little easier."

"Love!" he exclaimed with sudden pleasure as Kitty Hewitt stepped into his arms and they moved off in the rhythm of the dance; for she was quite the most superb dancer he had ever encountered. As they circled the little room to the softly played melody, "Marcheta," he thought how lovely this girl really was.

As the dance music stopped and they returned to their tables, Kitty Hewitt spoke: "It's hot in here. Do you mind opening one of those windows?"

There were no waiters in the room and Bertram himself crossed to the middle window, unfastened the catch and opened it a few inches. As he seated himself opposite Kitty Hewitt again, he saw that she was turning her vanity case, open, upside down.

A pale yellow powder spilled out and lay in a conical pile on her plate.

"I put in a whole box," she explained, "and it broke."

"That's funny-looking powder," he said.

The music had begun again, and the people at the other tables were dancing. Kitty Hewitt rose.

"Come along," she smiled.

"Shall we dance?" Bertram rose and came round the table to her.

"Oh, just a minute, first," she interrupted. "Please give me a match."

"A match?" He stared at her. She did not smoke, he knew. What then?

"Oh, here's one!" She had caught up a box of matches from the table and glanced quickly round the room. The prominent men and their partners danced on merrily, intent upon their own affairs. Suddenly Kitty Hewitt struck a match.

"What are you doing?" demanded Bertram.

"Stand back!" she warned him, and flung the burning match upon the powder on her plate. For a second it flickered there, as Bertram watched, spell-bound, then a blinding explosion filled the room.

"Flashlight!" Bertram heard himself gasp. Two women screamed; a man shouted hoarsely; the dance music stopped; and as a dense cloud of flashlight powder smoke rolled across the ceiling, panic paralyzed the dancers.

"Who did that?" Hugh Coswell's frightened voice. "Everybody quiet! What—"

A window was opening of itself—that is, was being pushed up from the outside—the window Bertram had partly raised, and as the people standing huddled on the floor stared in terror, a man stepped over the sill and into the room.

He was a tall, slender young man, in a checked suit, with a black velours hat slightly tilted over one eye. The face was pale and square-jawed, with cold blue eyes and a hard, straight mouth. Something vaguely familiar about these features— Then, with a start, Bertram recognized him. It was the youth upon whom he had operated, whose life he had saved, that amazing night six weeks before—Eddie Pellen, "Eddie the Immune."

A woman—it was Sally Keddleston—screamed shrilly again.

"Easy, there!" "Eddie the Immune" spoke harshly. "And stand where you are."

A curious smile twisted one corner of his mouth. "Don't get excited. We just took a flashlight of the bunch of you, in fact we took two pictures, at different angles, from the same flash, and our cameras are reliable. Everybody in this room will be recognizable, see?"

"My God!" burst from Hugh Coswell. Bertram, strangely calm, saw that his face had gone ashen pale.

"Don't get excited." The gunman's twisted smile faded, and he took a step forward. "Those flashlight pictures won't be used if you watch your step. Get me? But if any of you make trouble, they'd be swell identification. That's all. I guess you birds know what those pictures are worth.

"All right. Now nobody'll get hurt so long as you behave. See this table?" He nodded curtly to a small serving table in front of him. "Just walk up here and kick in with whatever you got on. Money an' jewels, get me? One at a time."

No one moved. Pellen's cold eyes traveled swiftly across the group, and rested on Sally Keddleston. Her eyes were wide with terror, and her rouged mouth stood out like a scarlet slash across the pale face.

"Pearls, I'm lookin' for," rasped the gunman. "Where are they? Did you stick 'em in your purse?" The woman's mouth opened helplessly. "No?" Eddie the Immune scowled at Coswell. "Maybe you didn't give 'em to 'er yet, eh? Maybe you were goin' to give 'em to her—late tonight. Come on!"

There was movement among the little group, and Hugh Coswell, badly scared, came forward, one hand groping in the inside pocket of his coat.

"Sh," nodded Pellen, with a grin. "I thought you had 'em. Well, just hand 'em over, brother—I'll see they get taken care of."

"Now the rest of you," he invited, with a significant gesture. "Step up and contribute. An' don't try to hold out on me, see? Pull any funny stuff an' I'll have the boys finish you. All right—hurry it up!"

A hard-looking youth in a rain coat and cap now appeared in the doorway, leveling an automatic. Hugh Coswell slunk away from the table, gray-faced, and crept closer to Bertram.

"God," he groaned, "if I ever get out of this—"

Bertram felt curiously sorry for him. This nightmare scene would doubtless prove a lesson to him. The others had now moved forward and were laying their offerings upon the altar of Eddie the Immune; the men silently parting with their purses, the women, not without whimpering protest, stripping off their rings and jewels. In less than two minutes Eddie the Immune had everything of value they possessed, safe in his own pockets; and again the twisted smile curved his hard mouth.

"You can go now," he said. The gunman at the door moved aside, and the victims without pausing, rushed out.

Bertram, feeling somewhat unnerved, glanced at Kitty Hewitt. She had apparently enjoyed the little comedy. It had passed off rather well; no one had seen her toss the match upon the flashlight powder.

Calmly Eddie the Immune lighted a cigarette and nodded to the gunman, who disappeared, then he swaggered toward Kitty Hewitt.

"Come on," he said quietly; "let's blow. The car's waiting."

"Oh," replied the girl, "but I'm going home with Doctor Darand. I came with him, you know."

"Oh!" Eddie the Immune's cold blue eyes fastened upon Bertram. "So you're Doctor Darand—eh?"

"Yes."

"You're the guy that worked on me?"

"I did what I could—"

"Huh."

No thanks at all. Instead, the gunman frowned at Kitty Hewitt. "Comin' back to town with him, are you?"

"Yes, Eddie."

Abruptly, without another word, he turned and walked out of the room. Bertram glanced at Kitty apprehensively; then a second later they heard a powerful automobile leaving the drive outside.

"Come," said Kitty Hewitt, "let's get out of here!"

Speeding along the highway toward town under the cold November stars, Bertram spoke but little. What a strange mess the whole affair was! Kitty Hewitt—and those gunmen—

"Well," she spoke quietly, "you saw the whole show. What did you think of it?"

"I don't know what to think."

"Want to call the police?"

"N-no."

"Or do you feel that maybe your friend Coswell learned a lesson? If I'm any judge of men, he did."

"Oh," answered Bertram, "you're right about that. That part of it was justifiable, I suppose. But the hold-up—"

"Listen." Kitty Hewitt's voice grew hard. "Those men we saw with women tonight are what people call 'higher ups.' They don't play the game squarely—they make their own rules. Nobody can touch them, do you understand?"

Surprised, he glanced toward her, and in the faint light her eyes were burning with a strange intensity.

"Men like that," she said, "are above the law. But they're not—above the lawless!"

Then suddenly he became aware that she was crying—crying softly to herself. Wondering, he took one hand from the steering wheel and laid it gently over hers; but she drew her hand away.

He slowed down and brought the roadster to a halt.

"When," he demanded, "shall I see you?"

"One never knows." She had opened the door and was stepping down. "If I need you, I'll call your office."
